You are here The long, long night of Art History A lot has happened in the last week, none of it has helped my situation at school, and so, I must now share this collective misery with all of you. I first learned of the whole saga on a particularly barby day, when a friend's mother came up to me one day and asked me what, exactly, I was doing at Portland State University. When I responded that I was a full-time student, her face immediately went blank, as though she had just realized she had scheduled her morning television viewing to end at 2:00 pm, something that may not be as uncommon as it seems, but that still seemed to be her particular glitch. When I looked closer, I saw the answer to my friend's question written on her face: I was trying to do well in Art History, to which her eyebrows formed an instant "o" and her eyes bulged out, followed immediately by a guilty-sounding "oh," as if to say that she could not believe that I could be up to such a thing, much less that I would be doing it so well. This was to be a particularly long, night of Art History. I immediately tried to reassure her. "I've been at this school for a couple of years, my major is Art History, and it's not that hard. It's only got 15 hours a week for my major, but since I'm always working as a freelance instructor, that means I'm going to have a lot of free time on my hands. I just need to be a little more organized than I've been, that's all. Really, I'm just having too much fun with it to worry about it." But that was enough to get her blood boiling and she interrupted, "Well, there's no point in you telling me that. And there's no point in me just sitting around eating corn chips while we both stew in our own juices. You need to get your act together and get a grip, or you'll look like the biggest dork in the world." And then, after a pause, she went back to her television, in search of the evening's news. I sat down, a bit uneasily, and then sat back down

Response of Mature Shrimp Caudal Gills to Cold Exposure. The cause of shrimps huddled together when the temperature is below the critical thermal minimum (CTM) has been elusive. We investigated the potential role of mature shrimps on stimulating their smaller, immature conspecifics into forming a protective huddle and subsequently observed the change in discharge activity of the adductor muscles of the inner gills. The electrical activity was recorded during cold exposure in shrimp (Caridina metajaponica) with different sizes. The CTM of the mature shrimps was 24°C, which was not consistent with the data from other reported shrimp species. When the shrimp reached the CTM, there was no stimulation of the immature shrimps when the mature shrimps were isolated. However, the spindles which were stimulated by the contact of the immature shrimps stopped when the immature shrimps were in a huddle. This phenomenon was observed until the immature shrimps were separated from the huddle by blocking the gill pore. This study revealed that the shrimps in the huddle would close their gills to conserve energy. In addition, this phenomenon was correlated with the decrease in the electrical activity of the adductor muscles. These results suggested that the mature shrimps would stimulate the immature shrimps to form a huddle.

Todd McShay breaks down the no-huddle offense Pittsburgh uses. (1:44) TAMPA, Fla. -- Mike Tomlin said Pittsburgh is preparing for opponents with the "no-huddle" offense. Coach Mike Tomlin has been preaching the "no-huddle" to his players and the coaching staff. Bruce Smith/USA TODAY Sports That's an NFL-style offense that features the ability to call a play with the snap and get into the huddle before the defense can line up. That's the way the Green Bay Packers play -- but not Pittsburgh, which runs a conventional offense. So if the Steelers want to play it up against the Packers, just how can they do it? I got a chance to test that out in an NFL practice with Chiefs coach Andy Reid, who has used the no-huddle offense for years with that team. First, you watch one practice in the NFL. Then, you watch another, and then another. Once you learn the basics, you can
